GEOGRAPHICAL COVERAGE LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION

Approximate geographical area of the “LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION” as defined by and covered in THE GRAND CANON. The boundary in the Gulf of California encompasses Mexico’s Reserva de la Biosfera Alto Golfo de California y Delta del Río Colorado and in Sonora embraces part of Reserva de la Biosfera del Pinacate y Gran Desierto. THE GRAND CANON defines “Lower Colorado River” as that region below Grand Canyon, which differs from the hydrological Lower Colorado River Basin that begins below the confluence of the Paria River at Lees Ferry and incorporates the sub-basins of all tributary streams, including the Little Colorado and Gila Rivers. (Refer also to the maps at the beginning of Part 12.)

Base map of Colorado River drainage basin modified from U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, Glen Canyon Dam Adaptive Management Group. The Upper and Lower Colorado River Basins delineate the apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River basin by the Colorado River Compact of 1922; divided just downstream from the confluence of the Paria River near Lees Ferry. Dams and impoundments are indicated on the map. Lighter-gray areas, not labeled, are American Indian reservations. Basin boundary is not depicted in Mexico. (For a map of the physiography and political geography of the Colorado River basin (including Mexico) see in the “Format and Coverage” section of THE GRAND CANON Volume 1/Part A.) See also maps that appear after the notes that follow below.

COBERTURA GEOGRÁFICA REGIÓN DEL BAJO RÍO COLORADO

— Área geográfica aproximada cubierta por THE GRAND CANON, que abarca las regiones del bajo Río Colorado. El límite en el golfo abarca la Reserva de la Biosfera Alto Golfo de California y Delta del Río Colorado en México, y en Sonora abarca parte de la Reserva de la Biosfera del Pinacate y Gran Desierto. Esta bibliografía define "Bajo Río Colorado" como la región debajo del Gran Cañón, que difiere de la cuenca hidrográfica del bajo Río Colorado que comienza debajo de la confluencia del Río Paria en Lees Ferry, Arizona, e incorpora las subcuencas de todos los arroyos tributarios, incluidos los ríos Little Colorado y Gila. (Consulte también el mapas al comienzo de la Parte 12.)

Mapa base de la cuenca de drenaje del Río Colorado modificado de la Oficina de Recuperación de los Estados Unidos, Grupo de Manejo Adaptivo de la Presa Glen Cañón. Las Cuencas del Superior e Inferior Río Colorado delimitan el reparto de las aguas de la cuenca del Río Colorado por el Acuerdo del Río Colorado de 1922; dividido justo aguas abajo de la confluencia del Río Paria cerca de Lees Ferry. Las presas y los embalses están indicados en el mapa. Las áreas gris claro, no etiquetadas, son reservaciones de indios americanos. El límite de la cuenca no se representa en México. (Para obtener un mapa de la fisiografía y geografía política de la cuenca del río Colorado, consulte la sección "Formato y cobertura" ["Format and Coverage"] de THE GRAND CANON Volume 1/Part A.) INTRODUCTORY NOTE FOR PARTS 11 AND 12

SPECIALIZED MATERIAL ABOUT THE LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION (BELOW GRAND CANYON)

PART 11 (Lower Colorado River—Environment, Natural History, and Special Scientific, Technical, or Cultural Issues) and PART 12 (Lower Colorado River—Water Supply, Management, and Policy) are separated from the Grand Canyon focus of this bibliography to facilitate a more sensible breakdown for those users who may be interested only in the special issues of the lower Colorado River region. Generally speaking, this is the region from Lake Mead to the Colorado River delta, including the areas of the Salton Sea and the Imperial and Mexicali Valleys of California and Baja California, the uppermost Gulf of California in Mexico's Biosfera Alto Golfo de California y Delta del Río Colorado and adjacent Reserva de la Biosfera del Pinacate y Gran Desierto. For this bibliography certain engineering projects along the Colorado River from Glen Canyon Dam to the delta are included in this group so as to keep citations about this genre together.

See further breakdowns within Parts 11 and 12.

Publications of a general nature that embrace the lower Colorado River region are cited in Part 2 of the bibliography.

As for the peculiar appendage of the Salton Sea region, as also covered in this bibliography, were it not for natural breakouts of the Colorado River to the Salton Sink, the natural history of the lower Colorado River region would not be attached to this bibliography. The Salton Sink (and its historical ancient Lake Cahuilla) is as much a part of the Colorado River delta as that which sinks actually into the Gulf of California. Then, with the anthropogenic breakout of the river during 1905–1907, the whole Salton Sea region—and eventually the Imperial and Mexicali valleys—opened itself in every other respect to the coverage of this bibliography, in terms of geography, geology, and all aspects of human affairs, like engineering, agriculture, culture, and tourism. Thus while a periodic hydrogeologic event let this bibliography embrace the physical Salton Sink, an accident by hapless water managers also forced it to embrace lasting environmental effects and human activities in this region.

In order to place the Salton Sea and Colorado Desert region in contemporary perspective with events of the early 20th century, the following two pages display two maps compiled by G. Sykes, from D. T. MacDougal et al.'s (1914) "The Salton Sea: A study of the geography, the geology, the floristics, and the ecology of a desert basin" (Carnegie Institution of Washington, Publication 193; cited herein as ITEM NO. 11.495): Plate 2, "Map of the Desert of the Colorado", and Plate 15, "Map of the Salton Sink".

NOTES FOR PART 11 ⁵⁰

THIS part includes references about all disciplines of environment and natural history, restricted to the region along the lower Colorado River corridor from Lake Mead to the delta. It includes geological field guides and geologic maps for this region, and hydrologic investigations of the river-proper as limited to this reach, including studies that embrace the part of Lake Mead that has inundated the lower Grand Canyon. Studies pertaining to the Gulf of California that embrace in some measure the Colorado River delta region are cited here. Selected archaeological and ethnological investigations of the river corridor are also in this part, as well as the Lake Mead and lower Virgin River region. Natural-history and environmental studies related to the Salton Sea, and water-quality and health issues relating to the waters of the lower Colorado River, below Grand Canyon, are also included. Administrative reports and study for areas in this geographic region are in this part. Some specialized reports that pertain to environmental activities in the U.S. Army Yuma Proving Ground and U.S. Marine Corps Air Station Yuma are also found in this part. Most general references related to agriculture are excluded from this bibliography due to the far-reaching and specialized nature of such material, which place it in the realm of agricultural methods in general; only those that pertain to specific issues in the lower Colorado River region and its irrigation projects are included.

As indicated in the title for Part 11, this part embraces mostly scientifically and technically oriented material. For example, geology, biology, and some archaeology and ethnology relating to the lower Colorado River region will be found together. Creating a truly separate, comprehensive bibliography for the lower Colorado River region would further require that thousands of citations also be copied from PART 2 (General Publications), again inflating and making the bibliography more complicated. Thus Parts 11 and 12 will serve those who are interested only in the specialized focuses of these parts of the bibliography. I have separated out into its own part (Part 12) only the water-management issues, which thematically makes sense, especially in the lower Colorado River region.

⁵⁰ Also see the introductory note to the Lower Colorado River Region unit (Parts 11 & 12) of this bibliography.

PART 11. ENVIRONMENT, NATURAL HISTORY, AND SPECIAL SCIENTIFIC, TECHNICAL, OR CULTURAL ISSUES

Regarding Section 1, I have enlarged the geographic coverage of this bibliography to embrace the environmentally protected areas at the northern end of the Gulf of California because many species and environments are affected by historic and changing contributions of the Colorado River through its delta. With regard to the marine faunas there, the environmental changes caused by the effective cessation of Colorado River flows into the gulf, and the effects of fishing activities, intertwine to such a degree that it is imperative to cite publications that relate to these areas and subjects. Documents that are Environmental Impact Statements, and similar administrative and guidance documents, are mostly included in Part 13 (Administrative Items) because they often embrace multiple areas of administrative oversight and are not solely focused on ecological concerns as might be inferred from the title; grouping all such management documents together in this bibliography is more sensible. Exceptions are those documents that are specifically or predominantly biological or ecological in perspective, which are included in Part 19 (Biology and Ecology) or in Part 11, Section 1 (for those items that pertain to the environment of lower Colorado River region locales), or items that relate to Native American cultural issues specifically, which are in Part 17 (Native Americans of the Grand Canyon Region) or Part 11, Section 3 (lower Colorado River locales).

Regarding Section 2, I likewise enlarge the geographic coverage of the bibliography to embrace the regional geological influences expressed in the upper Gulf of California and the Colorado River delta region generally.

Citations that relate to the flooding of the Salton Sea are found in two different parts of this bibliography. Items that pertain to relate to the natural breakout of the Colorado River into the Salton Sink in 1891 and historically earlier events are listed in Section 2. Items that pertain to the anthropogenic breakout of the Colorado during 1905-1907 are listed in Part 12, Section 1 of the bibliography.

Citations that pertain to the Peach Springs Tuff, named originally for occurrences in northwestern Arizona, are for the sake of bibliographical convenience cited in Section 2. The Peach Springs Tuff type locality is near Peach Springs, Mohave County, Arizona, and thus falls more properly into Part 21 of this bibliography. However, the unit has more notably been the subject of detailed studies and correlations throughout the Arizona–Nevada–California region, the tuff source area being identified in the Silver Creek caldera of the southern Black Mountains; a majority of the published work pertains to those correlated occurrences and identification of source area, which occur mostly in the lower Colorado River region.

Documents in certain specialized areas, such as geothermal energy and related investigations, may be found in online sources devoted to these areas — for example, the International Geothermal Association’s “Geothermal Conference Paper Database” at:

http://www.geothermal-energy.org/publications_and_services/conference_paper_database.html. The U.S. Department of Energy's Office of Scientific and Technical Information likewise has a comprehensive database, SciTech Connect, which consolidates the contents of OSTI's Information Bridge and Energy Citations Database, accessible at <http://www.osti.gov/scitech/>. In some cases, the citations gathered from these sources provide English-language titles for papers that may be in Spanish, but which titles were apparently taken from the accompanying English abstract. This may be reflected in some citations herein.

The Appendix to Section 2A—now removed to the separate Cartobibliography—provides guides to the quadrangle systems of topographic maps in the lower Colorado River region used by the U.S. Geological Survey and Mexico's Instituto Nacional de Estadística y Geografía and likewise for geological maps of the Servicio Geológico Mexicano, and maps of other agencies.

Regarding Section 3, the lower Colorado River region hosts Indigenous peoples who have traditional and legislatively administered lands in the U.S. and Mexico. Most items in this bibliography that relate to them are listed in that section.

As a subjective decision, I have not included probably thousands of citations that would relate to very technical agricultural studies in the lower Colorado River region. These would, in fact, best be the subject of a separate, specialized bibliography, which must be constructed from the start. Occasional agricultural items will be found in this bibliography, though. These are included for more specific focuses; for example, aspects of irrigation or taxonomic, ecological, or historical references.

Arbitrarily included in Part 11 are technical reports and articles that pertain to the U.S. Army Yuma Proving Ground and the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station Yuma.

As an informational note, the U.S. National Park Service's four-letter unit identifiers include "LAME", which indicated LAke MEad National Recreation Area. This followed the convention of applying the first four letters of single-name units, or the first two letters of the first two names of multiple-name units. The identifier, for obvious reasons, was eventually changed to "LAKE". Citations reflect both of these identifiers.

PART 11. ENVIRONMENT, NATURAL HISTORY, AND SPECIAL SCIENTIFIC, TECHNICAL, OR CULTURAL ISSUES

SECTION 1: ENVIRONMENT, ECOLOGY, BIOLOGY, AND PUBLIC HEALTH AND SAFETY

NOTES FOR PART 11, SECTION 1

MEXICO'S RÍO COLORADO, now in the best of times just a pitiful remnant of the Colorado River, eventually passes into the Reserva de la Biosfera Alto Golfo de California y Delta del Río Colorado that embraces the northernmost portion of the Gulf of California, its southern boundary spanning the gulf about between San Felipe, Baja California, on the west and Puerto Peñasco, Sonora, on the east. Although it might not seem necessary to include the marine environment of the Gulf of California in this bibliography, its northern end has for millennia been influenced by the outflow of the Colorado River, flush with the mighty, silt- and sand-laden torrents from the continental interior, perhaps at times influenced by the formation of geologically temporary lakes enroute—and, today, absolutely and contemptuously impacted by the complete cessation of river flow, every last drop shunted off to farms and cities, which has had impacts on the environment of the northern gulf. The lives of Indigenous peoples and modern Mexicans alike have also been affected by environmental and legislative acts in this area; and equally these people influence the environment of the gulf, including its biological communities. This historical connection of river, sea and people prompts the inclusion of the Biosphere Reserve area, but there this bibliography ends its geographical reach southward.

Readers who may be interested in a bibliography of ecologically focused work for the entire Gulf of California should consult Richard C. Brusca's vast, and frequently updated, online resource, "A Bibliography for the Sea of Cortez (Gulf of California)", at https://www.rickbrusca.com/http___www.rickbrusca.com_index.html/Research_files/Gulf%20Bibliography.pdf [URL thus; last accessed 20 August 2024].

Sociological and economic issues relating to protected areas in the northern Gulf of California are found in Part 2 (GENERAL PUBLICATIONS), or, if they pertain to Indigenous peoples of the region, in Part 11, Section 3. Items pertaining to health concerns among lower Colorado River Indigenous will also be found in Part 11, Section 3.

Because the waters of Lake Mead encroach upon the lower portion of Grand Canyon, items that relate to public health and safety in the Lake Mead region are consolidated with PART 15 (HEALTH AND SAFETY IN THE GRAND CANYON—LAKE MEAD REGION) of the bibliography. However, items that pertain to pollution and investigations of pollutants in Lake Mead, and their attendant concerns, are retained here in Part 11, Section 1.

Citations regarding environmental issues of the Yuma Desalting Plant are found in this section. However, see in Part 12, Section 1 of the bibliography for items that relate to the plant's impact on water-supply.

PART 11. ENVIRONMENT, NATURAL HISTORY, AND SPECIAL SCIENTIFIC, TECHNICAL, OR CULTURAL ISSUES

SECTION 1: ENVIRONMENT, ECOLOGY, BIOLOGY, AND PUBLIC HEALTH AND SAFETY

To help distinguish items that are solely about Mexico, Item numbers in colored italics within Section 1 (for example, 11.5889) denote these geographically restricted items.⁵¹ Item numbers that are not italicized in this Section pertain to the lower Colorado River region of the U.S. or the U.S. and Mexico together.

This section of the bibliography contains a great deal of taxonomic nomenclature of biological organisms; the so-called binomial and trinomial nomenclature of genera and species (Genus species; Genus species subspecies; Genus species var. variety, in italics) and capitalized proper names of higher taxonomic groups (like phyla, classes, and families, not italicized). Although a citation will be exactly as printed, in notes that may follow it I have taken the opportunity to clarify some of the nomenclatural conventions that may not be intuitive to those who do not practice in these fields. I have indicated as best as I have been able the newly introduced taxa in a publication that come from localities within the geographic embrace of this bibliography. To disambiguate variant usages, in the notes that I append to some citations I use spelled-out phrases to bring attention to these new taxa. For example, "new species" is used instead of the nomenclaturally more conventional "n. sp.", "nov. sp.", "sp. n." or "sp. nov." (which in any case are synonymous terms); likewise for "new genus", "new subgenus", "new subspecies", "new variety", "new combination", "new status", "new name", or any similar usage with a taxonomic name. In this fashion, too, one may find in this bibliography all such cited occurrences simply by searching for the spelled-out "new species" (etc.). The conventional forms do also appear when they are a part of a title or a quotation.

Ornithological style conventions call for the accepted common names of birds to be capitalized; for example, the Southwestern Willow Flycatcher and the Yuma Clapper Rail. Such usage is meant to convey the idea that the bird in question is one with a single, established taxonomic (scientific) name. This convention is not followed in this bibliography, in so far as no other animal or plant species are capitalized by practitioners in those fields, and to accordingly single out birds is awkward. Only in the case of direct quotations (within quotation marks) are bird common names shown herein with capital letters.

In quoted texts, ♂ and ♀ indicate specimens that are male and female, respectively.

Black poplar (Populus nigra) . . . The cottonwood of the United States (Populus deltoides) yields an abundance of long, soft, fibrous bark, used by the Indians for ropes, twines, sandals, mats, etc. 'Whoever has seen the petticoats made of the inner bark of the cottonwood (P. fremonti), worn by the squaws along the Colorado River, must have realized the possibility of utilizing the same material as well as that of the allied species.' (Dr. V. Havard.)" And see "Fig. 39. Willow wool (Salix pentandra) [. . .] The willow trees along the Colorado River, Arizona, yield [an] abundance of long, soft bast, from which the Indians make ropes and twine for domestic purposes, as well as sandals and mats. The females generally dress scantily, only that part of the body from the waist to the knees is hidden from view. This custom is observed by most of the Indian females living along the Colorado River. They strip off the bark from these trees and bury it in blue mud for a few days, after which it is taken out, washed clean, and dried. It is now soft, pliable, and easily handled. Being cut into requisite lengths, they are fastened very thickly to a belt of the wearer. ([Charles Richards] Dodge.)" (ENTIRE NOTES)]

[This is a profusely documented and illustrated publication, chiefly comprising the descriptions of new species (date of publication 30 October 2020). With respect to this bibliography, nearly all of the pertinent taxa are from the Grand Canyon region, for which see the citation of Baral et al. (2020, ITEM NO. 19.6519). This citation lists those taxa that are typified or for which descriptions are based on collections in the lower Colorado River region (as defined by this bibliography); numerous other localities are omitted in this summary citation. Only page numbers are given; pertinent enumerated plates of illustrations are embedded on those same pages. Locality data are given here only in condensed format, documenting just the geographic locale, although each published description includes collection information such as altitude, host material, collector, date of collection, and repository and catalog number of the material. One description cited here notes material that is “not included”; these specimens “deviate from the established taxa only in some minor points . . . [though] mentioned under that taxon which appears to be most closely related, but they are not included in a description, nor are they proposed as a separate new species.” (p. 17) The “not-included” materials, although taxonomically not precisely identified, are mentioned here because they document collections from the region that this bibliography covers. (Future researchers, of course, may indeed consider some such material to belong to the species under which Baral et al. have listed it.) Lists of included and not-included materials in the publication are often lengthy, with material sometimes from nation- and worldwide localities. Also note that the new taxa are credited to specific authors, not to the authors of the volume as a whole, but only the credited authors are listed in this citation even though the precise format is lengthier; for example, the first-listed species that follows is taxonomically more precise as “Orbilia sonorensis Baral & G. Marson in Baral, Weber, and G. Marson”. • Taxa noted from the lower Colorado River region: [1] Orbilia sonorensis Baral & G. Marson, new species (pp. 1145-1148); included material from “Nevada, Mojave Desert . . . 30 km SE of Las Vegas, 7 km W of Boulder, Railroad Pass”. [2] Orbilia vermiculati Baral & G. Marson, new species (pp. 1166-1168); not-included material from “Arizona, Mojave Desert, 15 km SE of Havasu Lake City [sic, Lake Havasu City], N of Aubrey Hills”.]

- 2018 11.17930 [Photo.] In november 2017, the Sierra Club Desert Committee held its fall meeting on the shore of the Salton Sea. In recent years the lessening of water input has caused the lake level to fall, making the exposed lakebed a source of toxic dust. An increase in water salinity will soon kill off the fish life turning the lake into a dead sea. here Imperial Irrigation District officials explain their mitigation plans for the region. The Survivor (Desert Survivors, Oakland, California), 37(1) (Spring): 3.

[Letter in response to news item in May issue (see Anonymous, 1954, ITEM NO. 11.5820) regarding the catch of a bony tail minnow in the Colorado River below the Blythe Weir. The author reports having caught and eaten these fish when a child in Needles, California, around 1910. He also notes, "It was about this same time that I remember the last of the paddlewheelers on the river. The old smelter was then in operation and run by a man named Godshall." He also notes that "We used to watch it [the river] in terror at it undercut its banks and swallowed house after house in swollen fury."]

- 1880 11.9862 Une excursion botanique au Colorado et dans le Far West par le prof. Marcus E. Jones, traduit l'Anglais par le Dr Henri Fonsny, de Verviers. Fédération des Sociétés d'Horticulture de Belgique, Bulletin (Royaume de Belgique, Ministère de l'Intérieur), 1879 (Part 4), viii, 64 pp. [separately paginated item with separate title-sheet within the full volume]. [The translator's introduction (pp. vii-viii) indicates that the work is from "le manuscrit original de deux excursions botaniques entre prises par l'auteur en 1878 et 79". A preface by Ed. Moren (pp. v-vi) indicates how this manuscript was obtained and made available for publication. The original manuscript seems never to have been published in English (but see Jones, 2022, which translates this French account).] [See "Seconde Exploration dans le Far West; l'Ouest Lointain"; par le professeur Marcus E. Jones" (pp. 37-54); specifically, pp. 53-54, which notes the author's plans to botanize in the Virgin and Muddy Rivers area of Utah and Nevada: "Mon intention est donc d'herboriser dans cette région autour de St-Georges, à l'embouchure de la grande chute du Colorado, sur le Rio Virgin, le Muddy et dans la contrée environnante. Après quoi je me dirigerai au nord vers le grand bassin pour y recueillir la flore des vallées sèches et des collines, qui m'a fait défaut en 1879. Et tout me fait espérer, dans ce voyage, la récolte d'une excellente collection." (ENTIRE NOTE)] [In French.]

- 1876 11.6017 (WITH George H. Horn) The Rhynchophora of America, North of Mexico. American Philosophical Society, Proceedings, 15(96) (December): i-xvi, 1-442 [entire number]. [NOTE: Cited here with question. Le Conte (p. 364) named the new species Tomicus confusus based on three specimens from "Southern California and Arizona"; no further information relating to the type localities is known. Swain (1924, ITEM NO. 19.6018) selected Le Conte's "California" specimen, in the Agassiz Museum, Harvard University, as the type for Ips confusus (Le Conte); he selected the "Arizona specimen" as the holotype of Ips lecontei, new species. Inasmuch as the genus represents forest beetles, it is not likely that the California specimen came from a locality pertaining to the lower Colorado River region as defined in this bibliography (thus in this context neither Le Conte nor Swain are cited in Part 11, Section 1). However, the genus is widely distributed, including the Grand Canyon region and higher elevations of Arizona, and although it is less likely that Le Conte's specimen is from the immediate Grand Canyon region, both Le Conte's and Swain's papers are cited here conditionally.]

Mexico], dealing death to the Indians. There is constant travel and traffic from these points to the frontier of Arizona and Upper California by land, and steamship navigation on the Gulf of California to the Colorado River (which empties its waters into the Gulf of California), thence to Fort Yuma on the Gila River, carries the disease northward. Some cases of fever of an unknown type (?) have already been reported in Arizona as having occurred among some travellers from the affected districts further south." Also, "It is north and west that the disease is travelling, and there is danger of its creeping into Arizona and Upper California, where the great system of railways which here begin to network the country may carry it into the east like a prairie fire." Quoted from a report by "Acting Assistant Surgeon Main" to Surgeon-General [John B.] Hamilton, dated October 16, 1883.]
