NEWSPAPER GUIDE FOR THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS

Brief guide to newspapers of the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions

NOTES FOR PART 31

NEWSPAPERS are not generally included in THE GRAND CANON. There are, however, some exceptions, notably The New York Times and the Deseret News (Salt Lake City) (see below). In other instances a newspaper is cited in THE GRAND CANON if an article had been reprinted later in another periodical; the original source is acknowledged in a comment at the end of the citation.

Special-interest newspaper-format periodicals are included in the bibliography; for example, High Country News, a mostly biweekly serial, later tri-weekly. Some weekly newspapers, and weekly magazines included with newspapers, are also cited herein; for example, Computerworld, and Flare from the Arizona Daily Sun (Flagstaff).

Part 31 comprises a listing of regional newspapers that some readers may wish to use to begin locating local (or sometimes online) sources.

Regarding fuller coverage from selected newspapers, citations from which appear in other parts of this bibliography

The New York Times. From The New York Times as many pertinent articles as possible have been cited in so far as they relate to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River. This newspaper was published from the beginning of modern excursions into the region, in the mid-19th century. It is as well a well-recognized periodical that is widely available online and through microform products. The Times is relegated to its own section of this bibliography; one section is arranged chronologically (Part 3, Section 1). At the time that this bibliography was started, the only way to access back issues of the Times was through microfilm, which for this title was widely available and thus a prudent addition to this bibliography. Now the Times is wholly accessible online,¹²⁷ although for recent years not always in facsimile presentation or sometimes omitting appropriate pagination. The online version, though, is completely searchable. The online material includes ephemeral, online-only articles (not listed in THE GRAND CANON).

The Deseret News. A purposeful comparison has been made in this bibliography to include citations from a western regional analog to The New York Times, this being the Deseret News (Salt Lake City), the oldest continuously published newspaper in Utah, now a daily production. Citations from the Deseret News are included as appropriate within the subject-specific sections of the bibliography. The Deseret News's earliest years (1850–1910) are now freely available online¹²⁸, and a conscious decision was thus made for THE GRAND CANON to include pertinent citations from these years because, like the Times, they cover the period beginning with modern explorations of the region. Deseret News (originally a weekly, becoming semiweekly in 1865 and daily in 1899—although earlier it was concurrently a weekly and semiweekly as The Deseret News and daily as The Deseret Evening News) is cited herein as Deseret News; most citations are from the weekly edition, the one posted online. Its citations to 1910 include many articles and notes that relate to the geographical coverage area of THE GRAND CANON. They are important to include herein because they have a Mormon perspective of concerted efforts of church and individuals to colonize and economically develop the resources of the region beyond the Utah border, from Lees Ferry to deep along the lower Colorado River corridor. And as well, the selection of news items reflects Deseret News's editorial slants on activities in neighbor states and the lower Colorado River corridor. Most telling is the newspaper's own Prospectus, which intended the periodicals to be documents of record from the start: "A paper that is worth printing, is worth preserving; if worth preserving, it is worth binding; for this purpose we issue in pamphlet form; and if every subscriber shall preserve each copy of the 'News,' and bind it at the close of the volume, their children's children may read the doings of their fathers, which otherwise might have been forgotten; ages to come."¹²⁹ Today, the complementary concept of binding is the searchable digitized page; for the next age.

¹²⁷ <http://www.nytimes.com>.

¹²⁸ Utah Digital Newspapers, <http://digitalnewspapers.org>.

PART 31. NEWSPAPER GUIDE FOR THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS

Since most of the citations from the Deseret News have been taken from the online postings of this newspaper, take note that the pagination reflects the pages as counted in each online issue. This is because the online postings do not usually preserve original pagination. In actuality, the newspaper is paginated, at least in its early years, consecutively through entire volumes. To accommodate this lack of online pagination, notations have been inserted into the citations in this bibliography noting "issue pagination", which begins with page 1 of each issue as denoted in the online postings. Users who refer to an issue will have to count forward from the first page to reach the item in question.

Introduction

Newspapers are a valuable resource to the historian. Long-running papers of any town or city are important historical documents, and to researchers who thrill in finding the obscure and unusual anecdote, small-town and out-of-print newspapers are a mine of information. Yet for a very long time their precarious existence and assured demise has been a matter of concern. In discussing “Newspaper Collections”, the Kansas State Historical Society worried in 1881:

It is conceded that nothing so well exhibits the history of the growth of a community, or makes so complete a record of its important events, as the files of its newspapers; yet there is nothing concerning the preservation of which there is so little care.¹³⁰

Newspapers are made to be thrown away. They can be reused in many ways, but ultimately most of them disappear. Only a few might survive, dutifully kept by a library; sometimes by an infatuated collector. Many papers are now known only by their names. Others have been microfilmed and digitized—and so they survive. Yet the bibliographical crime of microfilming or digitizing newspapers—and then discarding the originals—has been addressed in many venues. It is hardly the purpose here to document these deeds, but only to say that the problem is recognized. In many cases, the copies suffice, although the feel of the original is lost; sometimes, as with the case of microfilms, any color is lost, not to mention that details in resolution or image quality often suffer. Still, it is through the newer media that the original products will be experienced now by most readers.

This list of newspapers is not exhaustive, nor is there any guarantee that all of them have had coverage of events or people of the immediate Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River regions. But within these regions it is likely that newspapers published there have had a higher frequency of canyon- and river-related items than the newspapers of more distant places. Naturally, they will have some measure of robust coverage for their immediate areas. It would be very desirable to compile a separate bibliography of newspaper items—just for the region embraced by this bibliography. However, even this focus would require thousands of hours of reading from online, microfilmed, and original newsprint copies, many of them difficult to find, which imaginatively could be a lifetime’s task.

The earliest newspaper of the greater Grand Canyon region appears to have been the semiweekly Arizona Gazette (Prescott), beginning in 1866, although the Arizona Daily Miner (Prescott) began at about the same time. Several other newspapers started in the late 1860s, and a majority of papers began in the 1870s-1890s; most, however, were short-lived.

PART 31. NEWSPAPER GUIDE FOR THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS

In Yuma, the earliest newspaper was apparently the weekly Arizona Free Press, beginning in 1871.

More and more early newspapers from across the country are being made available online; practically, though, most of the existing ones have not been digitized. Some titles may be available on microfilm, but are not digitized. Libraries can assist the researcher in finding the repositories of these newspapers.

This sampling of newspapers of northern Arizona, southern Utah, southern Nevada, and southeastern California were published within the bounds covered by THE GRAND CANON. Pertinent newspapers from Mexico are added.

An on-demand publication.] ["Newspapers seen in this book: Arizona Citizen [Tucson], The Arizona Miner [and Arizona Weekly Miner, Prescott], and The Weekly Arizonian [Tucson]" [also Arizona Sentinel, Yuma] (from p. [3] and back cover, with emendations here). Facsimile reproductions of clippings; dates and newspaper titles indicated. Note that these clippings pertain to Yuma-vicinity news as reported in geographically dispersed papers. Apparently produced as a genealogical researcher's reference inasmuch that there is a brief list of family names on p. [3] and back cover.] [NOTE: There also is at least one other comparable volume for Searchlight, Nevada, but which was unavailable when an attempt was made to acquire it in 2023, thus it has not been seen. Its format seems to be identical to the Yuma volume.]

Newspapers prepared by Grand Canyon companies of the Civilian Conservation Corps during the 1930s and 1940

The Center for Research Libraries (www.crl.edu) provides access to newspapers produced by companies of the Civilian Conservation Corps; usually they were mimeographed and the series short-lived. Robert W. Audretsch's history of the CCC at Grand Canyon¹³¹ includes a synopsis of these productions as recorded by CRL, which is drawn upon and rearranged here for these citations. The dates given are ranges for individual copies noted by CRL's sources. Audretsch notes, "more were likely published."
